

Who Has Been The Biggest Influence in Your Life, and Why?

In my journey to becoming a nurse, one person has significantly influenced my life — my grandmother. As a nurse herself, her life stories painted a vivid picture of nursing that goes beyond administering medication and performing medical procedures. Through her, I learned about the compassion, empathy, and dedication that nursing entails.

My grandmother was a nurse in our local hospital for over three decades. Her anecdotes of late-night shifts, emergency situations, and heartfelt patient interactions showcased her dedication to her profession. She often emphasized how nursing is not merely a profession but a calling that requires a deep-rooted desire to help others.

However, during her battle with cancer, I truly understood the impact a nurse could have on someone's life. Despite being patient, she displayed an unfathomable level of strength and resilience. But the bond she shared with her nurses caught my attention the most. The way they cared for her, with such respect and compassion, left a profound impression on me.

During those arduous times, I also had the opportunity to assist in her care. I helped with her medication, comforted her during painful nights, and listened to her fears and hopes. This personal experience gave me a first-hand view of nursing, further reinforcing my desire to become a nurse.

My grandmother's journey, both as a nurse and a patient, taught me the true essence of nursing. She instilled in me the values of empathy, resilience, and selflessness. These values have influenced my career choice and the person I am today. I strive to emulate her strength and compassion in every aspect of my life.
